The U.S. must provide sufficient funding for the critical humanitarian needs of Afghans throughout the country; provide adequate funding for the Marshall Plan promised by your Administration and dramatically expand peacekeeping and security forces. Women must be central to any effort to establish a democracy and security is essential in preventing Afghanistan from becoming, once again, recruitment soil for terrorists, drug traffickers and warlords.

To: President George W. Bush and Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice

We urge you to do everything in your power to help Afghan women and girls. Girls' schools, women election workers, women employees of humanitarian aid organizations, and women leaders and journalists have all been targets of insurgent Taliban groups, warlords and remnants of old Mujahideen forces. The United States must dramatically increase food and other humanitarian assistance, especially direct assistance to Afghan women led NGO's, expand peacekeeping and security forces throughout Afghanistan, and dramatically increase funding so that the Marshall Plan promised by your Administration can be realized. Women must be central to any effort to establish a democracy and security is essential in preventing Afghanistan from becoming, once again, recruitment soil for terrorists, drug traffickers and warlords.
